The Many Faces of Violence: Strategies for Prevention For the New Millennium

Violent and abusive acts negatively affect the physical and mental health of an estimated 2.2 million US residents every year. Among the many types of violent and abusive behaviors reported, suicide and homicide together account for the fourth leading cause of premature death prior to the age of 65. For example, homicide is the leading cause of death in Black men between the ages of 15 and 34. For these reasons, the multi-causal and multifaceted problem of violence has emerged in the last 15 years as a public health priority, particularly in communities of color where violence is at epidemic proportions.

The 1998 Minority Health Conference will examine the issues of violence that affect our culturally and ethnically diverse communities. Topics will include homicide, gun/firearm-related deaths, children and violence, domestic violence, and youth/gang violence. The Conference's goals are to:

- Present interventions, policies and research that illustrate varied and innovative ways of examining, preventing and reducing violence in communities of color (an evaluation component will be part of these presentations);
- Summarize and disseminate information about violent and abusive behavior within the larger sociopolitical context;
- Provide the opportunity for increased interaction between conference attendees and presenters for the purposes of learning practical applications in preventing community violence.
